ALTHOUGH Ruth Roland now appearing in Pathe's series "The Price of Folly," is only twenty-three years old, she has been on the stage seventeen years. She made her debut in child's parts on the Pacific Coast and was one of the attractions of the company in which she played. She attracted the attention of David Belasco when playing Little Lord Fauntleroy and he termed her one of the best child actresses he had seen.

As an ingenue, she won even greater laurels. She was renowned for her versatility, playing comedy or dramatic parts with equal ease. She began her work in motion pictures about five years ago in Western and Indian plays. Later she was put into comedies and was a success in them.

Her first continued play was "Who Pays?" Then she was chosen for the star in the successful Pathe serials, "The Red Circle" and "The Neglected Wife."

"Shifting Sands" is the title of the eighth and last of the "Price of Folly" dramas in which Miss Roland makes her latest appearance.

Hippodrome Show Pleased Crowds

Featured in the show at the Hippodrome this week are the Musical Kings, a group of instrumentalists and singers that at all three performances yesterday delighted the audiences with their clever manipulations of violin, double-necked guitar, saxophones, cornet, trombone, mandolin and a number of other instruments besides several song selections in which the harmony was exceptionally pleasing.

This part of the program is easily the outstanding feature of the initial bill which is called "Dolly Dimples." However, it is not the whole show. The chorus deserves special mention for several reasons. The costumes are a bit scanty, but no one would want to find fault with it on that score because the scantiness isn't a bit suggestive of needless Tuesday, but rather it affords an exhibition of prettily formed "pegs" which the ladies use to good advantage in several dance numbers.

Helen Kennedy is a vivacious coquette who essays the title role and proves herself a charming comedienne. There is plenty of comedy in the bill and the laughs are produced mostly through ludicrous situations, though there are many clever comedy lines all through the bill. The same program will be repeated today, and tomorrow will bring to the boards one of the best bills in the company's repertoire. It is called "Him at the Cabaret" and is a chaste comedy.

The Musical Kings will continue as a feature and a complete change of wardrobe will be donned by the chorus.

The Paramount-Sennett comedy on the screen proved as funny as any of the Sennetts so far produced. This too will be run over again today and will be followed tomorrow by another chapter of the Helen Holmes railroad thriller, "The Lost Express."

Morocco Comedy at Grand Tomorrow

"So Long Letty," Oliver Morosco comedy with music, which has been playing to crowded houses from coast to coast for more than two years, will be shown at the Grand theatre tomorrow night. This merry play was written by Mr. Morosco and Elmer Harris and Earl Carroll provided the lyrics and music. It's a play of California, with a California cast, which means the very best obtainable.

There is a considerable plot for a musical play. In fact the story is based on a successful farce "Your Neighbor's Wife."

Discontented with their respective better halves, two men plot to swap wives. The women, scenting the plot, devise a counter-dance. They refuse to wait for divorce, but insist that they must have a week's trial before they consent to swap husbands for good. At first scandalized at this trial marriage plan, the husbands consent at last and they swap with each other the night keys to their respective trolley cars. Of course, the wives do the job thoroughly and at the end of the week there are two humbled husbands pleading for the return of their own trolley keys.

The farce is set to a lively accompaniment of dancing, bathing-suit girls, who whirl and dance gracefully and scantily. It also introduces the diversion of a young Spanish girl in the search of romance.

The comedy is generously injected with tuneful airs and catchy melodies, in which is apparent the Hawaiian coloring of the popular songs of the moment.

Jack Pickford at the Nelson

"The Spirit of 17," with Jack Pickford the star, showing at the Nelson, is strongly patriotic but it differs a great deal from the usual run of war pictures. It deals with an economic situation that is said to have existed in several parts of our country since we entered the war, and it emphasizes a phase of espionage which cannot receive too careful attention. The strike in the boy's town has been incited by German agents and they also have laid plans to blow up the copper mine. The plotters are in the employ of the mine and it is only through quick action, and with the help of a troop of inmates of a nearby old soldiers' home, that the boy is able to effect their capture. The story was written by Judge Willis Brown of the Chicago Juvenile Court, and an easy going scenario was made from it by Julia Crawford Ivers.

The director, William D. Taylor, has spared no pains in staging the picture and the settings, lighting effects and other requirements are up to the usual Paramount standard. A large cast of capable players gives Mr. Pickford satisfactory support. The extra people are well trained.

Second Day of "Her Silent Sacrifice"

The Princess is repeating "Her Silent Sacrifice" today. In the play Alice Brady as Arlette is a French girl who dwells with her grandfather, the proprietor of an inn, within the quaint village of Savener. Arlette's ntry into the world was a somewhat unfortified one, and the stigma of this has made life in the provincial little town anything but pleasant for her. Richard Vale, an indigent young American, comes to Savener to sketch, and lodges at the inn. He meets Arlette, and, attracted by the girl's wild beauty, induces her to pose. This she finally consents to do, and falls deeply in love with him. The portrait is at last finished, and Vale, penniless, is at the point of starvation. He is found unconscious by Arlette, and she henceforth becomes his patron saint and ministering angel.

Prince Boissard, arriving in Savener in quest of diversion, takes a violent fancy to Arlette, and, repulsed by her, becomes wonderfully ingenious in thinking up methods of conquest. An art connoisseur, he sees merit in Vale's painting, which Arlette is responsible for his seeing, and he proposes to help Vale, financially and in other ways, provided Arlette will, in the course of time, grant him the intimacy he wishes. Arlette undergoes a silent struggle, but in the end agrees, that Vale may benefit. A year passes, and the price is about to be paid by Arlette, when Vale returns from Italy, famous, and Prince Boissard is killed in his attempt to ravish Arlette, by his Hindu servant. Arlette is then free to love and marry Vale.

Fox Kiddies in Big Production

The feature at the Dixie today makes us suspect that even if you have passed the age when "Jack and the Beanstalk" is your favorite work of fiction, you will undoubtedly enjoy the recollection of the old thrills that this screen version will bring to your mind. It is the sort of thing that you invite a child to see, chiefly as an excuse for going yourself, and then proceed to enjoy it as much as your small guest. The exciting old tale has been developed on the screen with absolute fidelity to the original story and is staged in an elaborate and spectacular setting, which reproduces all of its delightful horrors and thrills. The giant is as huge and ferocious as a giant could possibly be, the miracle of the beanstalk as convincing as it was in our childhood and all the exploits of the dauntless Jack are reproduced exactly as they were told in the well-known old-fashioned picture book.

The cast is made up almost entirely of children who enter into the spirit of the play with very evident enjoyment. The miniature village of Cornwall swarms with these Hilpitan inhabitants who were saved as we all remember, from the ferocity of the giant by the fearless Jack, Francis Carpenter, in the role of this diminutive hero, and Virginia Lee Corbin as the lovely princess made two of the most charming lovers that ever lived happily ever after.

"CLOSE-UPS"

—Mary Pickford's new director, William D. Taylor, has directed only Pickfords for the past year, he having been Jack's director in the Tom Sawyer pictures.

—Spottiswood Aitken, who was one of the stars in "The Birth of a Nation," and Fanny Midgely, a well known lace star, will be in the supporting cast of Mary Pickford's next Artcraft picture, "How Could You, Jean?"

NEED WORKERS AT LOCAL RED CROSS

Chapter Does Not Want to Fall oDwn on Kit Requisition.

Comfort kit workers are wanted by the score at Red Cross headquarters at once in order that the chapter may not fall down on its assignment of 1,500 comfort kits which must be completed within two weeks and shipped to Washington. Already materials and supplies have been assembled at Red Cross headquarters in the city building and workers are at work now. This is why that most any one can do and the demand is imperative. The local chapter has not as yet fallen down on a requisition and does not want to do so at this time and in order that the allotment may be completed within the time specified scores of workers must get busy at once. If you can't give but a day give that and if you can't give but an hour or two give that much time in making these kits which mean so much to the comfort of our boys at the front and in the cantonments.

It is hoped there will be a large turn out of Red Cross members each day at headquarters until the 1,500 comfort kits are completed and on their way to Washington.

Born, on Sunday, to Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Matthews, a daughter, Mrs. Matthews was formerly Miss Maude Rogers. Mr. Matthews is employed at The Times mechanical department.
